Q: Space between lines and elements in Flowlayout I need to add space (not gutter) between lines and elements in Flowlayout. Is there any available property like this? A: You have several property-naming conventions. A common one is to follow the field name with a leading underscore, and the property name (without the leading underscore) with a trailing $. space_in_between_elements (fits the datatypes) _non_empty_elements (fits the datatypes) _elements_width (fits the datatypes) Other conventions: _space_between_elements (fits the datatypes) _element_width (fits the datatypes) You need to be very careful with property and datatype naming conventions, since there are many common extensions defined in Flow. Another common naming convention is to use code names for properties, such as flow_between_elements, and the corresponding styling rule for what you're looking for might be named something like.flow-between-elements.
