* First, the concept of layers is essential. A layer is a spot where changes can be made to a photograph without modifying the background information. For example, to change the color of a person's lips, you create a new layer above the person's face. Then you make the changes to that layer, making sure that none of the person's features are covered by the edits. Then you use the Layer> Merge Layers command to combine the layer with the original image. The changes are then displayed on top of the original image. * In order to complete an image in Photoshop, you need to use a combination of the following three tools: the Move tool (also called the Pointer tool), the Select tool (also called the Lasso tool), and the Brush tool. The Move and Select tools are very similar. The Move tool is used to navigate an image; the Select tool is used to determine the exact points or parts of an image you want to make changes to. The Brush tool is used to paint select or fill in the areas that you designate with the Select tool. With these tools, you can create interesting images in Photoshop. * Tutorials for Photoshop can be confusing. That's because there are many ways to approach a project using Photoshop. However, they all begin with a basic understanding of the Photoshop interface and where everything is located on your computer. So try to learn the basics and you'll start to understand how to create great images using Photoshop. * * * There are numerous tutorials for learning how to use Photoshop, but here's a good place to start: * Coffee & a Create Book: Photoshop for Dummies, by Christopher B. As police officers from across Ontario face a renewed test, like never before, to see if they can push the technology they carry with them to the max, some officers are not only retiring early, but they're also hoping to get out of the job. "Looking at the job now, it's a suicide mission," says a veteran Toronto police constable, speaking on the condition of anonymity due to the sensitive nature of the job. He joined the force in 2004, and is now set to retire in just over a year, at age 49. "We're working longer hours, just to make ends meet, and getting older as well." In the last few years, young officers are hitting the front lines with the big, heavy equipment — like the surveillance system that is being phased out by a new police vehicle fleet. Older officers are now back at the crux of the technology — hitting the streets with less technological help, and using the Toronto police's Map Computer service, and their social-media networks to report and solve crimes. "It's a very high-stress job," says Toronto police spokesperson Mark Pugash, noting the pressures police officers face, as they're "charged with upholding the law and keeping the public safe." In 2006, the Toronto police reported they employed more than 6,500 constables. But, in recent years, it has become harder for the force to hire new recruits and keep them. On Tuesday, Chief of Staff Chris Adams offered the following statement when asked why Toronto's police force is recruiting more constables, but declining officers. "We are a growing, though aging, organization. And during tough financial times, we simply cannot justify taking our best and brightest into a job with little reward and low pay. So we have a responsibility to the city to ensure our service remains world-class and our community safe." "We are a growing, though aging, organization." In response to a Star reporter's question about the need to go back to recruiting constables, Adams responded: "At this time, we have plenty of more experienced officers. But we also want to be able to attract and retain some of the most talented and valued officers of all time." Currently, there are 15,000 active sworn Toronto police officers.

Common Stuff "Common Stuff" is a song by English rock band the Beatles from their 1968 album The Beatles. It was written by Lennon, McCartney, and Harrison. Lennon plays lead guitar on the track. "Common Stuff" is the second track on side two of the original LP release. It was also included as the closing track on the 1994 stereo CD reissue of The Beatles. Recording "Common Stuff" was recorded on 14 February 1968, during the Get Back sessions. The song was written by Lennon, McCartney, and Harrison, with Lennon playing lead guitar. In an interview, John Lennon said, "I had a minor guitar solo that came in and Paul introduced it, and the song was happening with the guitar thing coming in." Other members of the band thought that a banjo solo would be a good addition to the song. "We recorded it and then we put the usual Beatles chorus vocal over it, and it sort of worked", Lennon recalled. Personnel John Lennon – lead guitar, backing vocals Paul McCartney – bass guitar, backing vocals George Harrison – lead guitar, backing vocals Ringo Starr – drums Personnel per Ian MacDonald. Cover versions "Common Stuff" was covered by Buddy Guy on the Paul Weller tribute album G.B.H. (God Bless How Many People) in 1990, by Blues Pajama Club in 1993, by Tom in 1995, by Me First and the Gimme Gimmes in 1997, by Skaface in 1998, and by Johnny Winter in 1999.
