even though maslows hierarchy of needs makes reference to motivation and the basis for the functioning of the individual, it does not include the recent research that has covered the subject. the holistic dynamic theory, on the other hand, is based on a lot of the ideas in maslows hierarchy of needs, but it changes it in several areas. the theory covers satisfaction, which is part of a person's motivation. it also introduces the concept of the personality of the individual, and it includes the transactional model of analysis (feist & feist, 2008, p. 275). the holistic dynamic theory, due to being much broader in scope, can be applied to a much wider audience, more often than maslows hierarchy. the theory was introduced by the sociologist abraham maslow in 1954, in an article called "a theory of human motivation." he was a psychologist, and he worked for two years researching the most fundamental aspects of motivation. over the years, many people have been inspired by the holistic dynamic theory and have incorporated it into their own theories of motivation. social interest is an adjective that means relating, including that which is internal. it refers to the interaction of a person with his or her environment. the motive of social interest is related to the need of self-preservation; and, consequently, it is diametrically opposed to hunger, lust, and a desire for power. the motive of social interest is expressed by a wish to be of service to others and to become integrated into a group, which allows one to achieve a sense of self-preservation. to be or not to be - that is the question.
